

Adam McDonald Bids Hudson Farewell

Adam McDonald

AFTER 36 YEARS OF EXTRAORDINARY efforts and tireless service, Adam McDonald said farewell in 1999 to an organization deeply indebted to his loyalty.

McDonald joined the Hudson Institute in 1962—just one year after Herman Kahn, Max Singer and Oscar Rubenhausen opened the Institute's doors along the Hudson River. Since his arrival, Adam has helped build Hudson from its New York roots to the current heartland headquarters in Indianapolis.

Former Hudson Institute Senior Fellow Neil Pickett best summarized Adam's retirement in a tribute letter. "It is hard to imagine that Adam McDonald is ready to retire...it's hard to imagine him not working...not fixing...not helping...And, most of all, it's hard to imagine Hudson Institute without Adam McDonald," Pickett wrote.

On behalf of everyone associated with Hudson Institute during Adam's extraordinary tenure, we express our sincere thanks and appreciation to Adam and extend our best wishes for a long, successful and happy retirement.

Acknowledgments

Copywriting:

Lynnell Nixon-Knight

Photography:

Shawn Spence Photography

MediaWright

Sylvia Johnson Photography

Design and Production:

MJM Design

Printing:

White Arts, Inc.

(l-r) Susy Cochran, receptionist; Richard Garris, office services coordinator; Barb Husk, network administrator; Adam McDonald, facilities manager